Who is this booklet for?

This information is for anyone applying to university who:

- Has a Specific Learning Difference (including dyslexia)
- Wants to apply for support from the Disabled Students' Allowances (DSAs)
- Wants to know what proof of their Specific Learning Difference is required from their Funding Provider when applying for DSAs.

What proof of my Specific Learning Difference does my Funding Provider need?

You must be able to prove that you have a Specific Learning Difference and that it will affect your studies at university. This proof should be contained in the most recent copy of your assessment report.

What sort of report will be accepted?

The Government has produced guidelines regarding assessment reports accepted for Disabled Students' Allowances applications. The guidelines are called 'SpLD Working Group 2005/DfES Guidelines for Assessment of SpLDs in Higher Education.

If you already have a report and are unsure whether your report meets these criteria, you should contact the person who assessed you and check with them.

What if my report is more than two years old?

If your report is more than two years old, but meets the Government criteria, your Funding Provider should accept it for a Disabled Students' Allowances application.

Should I apply for the Disabled Students' Allowances before I start university?

Yes. The application process can take several months and failure to apply can delay your support.

What if my report is not acceptable to my Funding Provider?

You will need to have a new assessment, which meets the Government criteria.

If you are arranging your assessment independently because you want to apply for DSAs, check with your Assessor whether their report will meet the guidelines.

'Useful contacts and resources' at the end of this booklet includes organisations which can help you find a suitably qualified person in your area who assesses adults with Specific Learning Differences.

What if I haven't got a copy of my report?

If you were assessed at school or college, but don't have a copy of the report, you should request a copy.

If I need to have a new assessment, will my Funding Provider pay for it?

No, they will not pay to prove the existence of a Specific Learning Difference.

If I need to have a new assessment, can the University help me pay for it?

We may be able to help pay the cost of an assessment once you have enrolled on a course at De Montfort University.

If you are unable to have an updated assessment come to see Disability Advice and Support once you have enrolled at the university to find out whether we can help you pay for a new assessment.

This is also an opportunity for you to discuss dyslexia support at the university and find out what you need to do to access it.
